

TWO KIDS TALKING PHILOSOPHY

GIRL Do you believe life to be prefabricated, prefabricated being defined as pre-made not predetermined, or is it an ever-evolving archaic entity of interconnected accidents resulting in a facade of linear order?

BOY Ah...yes.

GIRL In saying that, are you eluding to an assumption or orderly chaos within the constructs of our perceptions and, ifso, to what extent or are you merely piggybacking the accepted norm of the “there it is, so it must be” contingent?

BOY Ah...yes.

GIRL But in saying that you must concede that the makeup of such a theory must factor in elements of faith. Surely, you can't be so bold as to presume such a foundation without allowing for a variance perception within the perimeters of what we, for conversation sake, herein shall define as the supernatural.
